PROFILE

I am Professor of Politics at the University of Liverpool, working on elections and political parties in the United Kingdom and Ireland, the politics and institutions of Northern Ireland, and reform of the voting age. Since 2010 I have been Principal Investigator on the Economic and Social Research Council's Northern Ireland General Election studies, the main academic survey series measuring electoral behaviour in Northern Ireland. Alongside the research I have broadcast on politics for three decades and have acted as a studio expert for the BBC during election coverage since 2000.
